FORCING ASPARAGUS. - Those who are fond of this delicious vegetable, and desire to lengthen its season can do so with little trouble or expense by starting some roots under glass in a hot bed in the early part of March. Two sashes, three by six each, will, under careful treatment, give a couple of bunches every other day for a month or so, until such a time as the outof door growth comes into market. Old aspara-gus roots are the best for forcing. When the bed is made the roots may be set eight or ten ioches apart and covered with about three or four inches of rich soil, then put on the ashes and cover a night with straw mats or other covering to protect from cold weather. The bed will require frequent watering to keep the earth most; this should be done at midday, and always with tepid water. The temperature of the bed may be nigh up to 70°. This plan of forcing asparagus could be carried on with some profit by florists by arranging beds of earth under the tables in forcing houses, and planting old asparagus roots. The requisite to start young plants would be quite enough to force an early growth of asparagus, which would sell readily at high prices in market during March and early part of April.—N. Y. Tribune.

Dogs. -Virginia is cursed by a greater multitude of detestable curs than she ever before had. They are a drain upon the means of subsistence for men, besides being destructive and seriously diminishing the general wealth and prosperity. It is time that something positive was done by the Legislature for the protection of the public against this great nuisance. It is a question between shop and dogs. The culture of the two animals cannot both be prosecuted successfully in the same community. The day of thorough-breds is nearly gone. The day of dogs of "low degree" is in its fulness. For the sake of the farming and stock raising communities the number of dogs ought to be greatly diminished, and those allowed to live ought to be able to give a good account of themselves. Virginia wants relief from dogs and drones alike .- Dispatch.
